Press Release

Noted Pet Communicators Offer Free Pet Communication at Cat Show in Baltimore

Suzanne and Chuck Fisher, noted Pet Communicators, will be giving free 2-minute Pet Communication sessions at the Crab & Mallet Cat Show in Baltimore on March 13 and 14, 2010. Come to the Pikesville Armory, 610 Reisterstown Road in Baltimore and find out what Spot and Fluffy are really thinking.

Baltimore, MD, March 8, 2010: Bring a picture of Spot or Fluffy and get a free 2-minute Pet Communication consultation from Chuck or Suzanne.

Featured Pet Communicators at many pet expos on the East Coast and at cat shows from New Hampshire to Florida, Chuck and Suzanne are dedicated to helping you understand your pet better.

Many people joke that they are unsure that they want to hear what their pets have to say about them. But these doubts fall by the wayside when their pets have behavioral problems that they want Suzanne and Chuck to help solve. Some common behavioral problems Suzanne and Chuck work with include pets not eating, pets relieving themselves in inappropriate places, pets destroying furniture, and pets biting or scratching their people.

Chuck and Suzanne work with all types of pets. Some species are more willing to communicate than others. Chuck and Suzanne are owned by four cats who travel with them and who they say leave them in no doubt that the cats are in charge in their household.

Chuck and Suzanne say that people who love animals and have pets are already communicating with their pets - they just need to refine their skills. Until they do, Suzanne and Chuck are available to give them some insight into what their pets are thinking.

Suzanne and Chuck have known about their abilities as Pet Communicators for many years, but have only offered their services to the public since 2004. Suzanne first learned about her ability to communicate with other species over twenty years ago at the state fair in Richmond when a chicken spoke to her as she walked through the chicken barn. Chuck learned he could communicate with
